SOUTH-CAROLINA AND COUNTRY GAZETTE; JOURNAL.

Containing the freſheſt Advices, both Foreign and Domeſtic.

To the PRINTER.

THE Havock occaſioned by the dreadful Effects of Fire, which this Town, and many Parts of the Province, have fatally experienced, and are ſtill liable to, through the known Careleſneſs and Neglect of Negroes, &c. demand ſome Attention from every Member of the Community, whole Families having thereby received irreparable Injury, and ſometimes intire Ruin, for Want of ſome general Means of Security to guard their Property againſt ſuch ſudden and unavoidable Deva ſtation. I ſhall therefore make no Attempt to Apologize to the Public, for ſubmitting to them the following Summary, of a Plan or Scheme, as an eaſy Method of preſerving to Sufferers, a Security againſt any Damage ſuſtained by Fire, without Riſque or Danger to the Parties concerned, by dividing the Value of any Loſs ſuſtained into ſmall Proportions, only amongſt the Subſcribers, to repair the Damage, or replace the Sum inſured for: Some Eſtabliſhment of this Kind, if thought of Conſequence enough to engage the Public Notice, may be either fixed upon the Plan of an Inſurance-Office, or under the Title of an amicable general Contributionſhip, united into a Society, by proper Regulations and Orders, for granting Policies of Inſurance, againſt Loſſes by Fire, and with the Additions and Amendments that may probably be made to it, be the Means of laying a Foundation that may prove of general Service to the Province; the Neceſſity of adopting a Meaſure of this Sort in Carolina, need not be pointed out, ſo reſpectable as it is, for the Value of its Produce, its Opulence, rich Stores, and extenſive Commerce; and every Member will alſo have the Advantage of ſaving above Half per Cent. in the Premium he now pays at Home, in having his Effects underwrote there, which of itſelf in a little more than two Years only, will be a Sum equal to the whole Amount of the Depoſit, provided it ſhould be entirely ſunk, which may not be the Caſe, his Property will be equally well ſecured, and the Inconvenience and Delay attending the Neceſſity of having atteſted Proofs ſent Home to recover his Loſs, prevented. I do not preſent the Public with it as a Scheme of my own forming; ſtruck with the Neceſſity of eſtabliſhing ſomething of this Kind in the Province, occaſioned my being very particular in my Enquiries lately at Home, into the Manner and Management of the different Societies, formed there, to proſecute the various Plans of Inſurance from Fire; with the Mode of Calculation to render thoſe Eſtabliſhments generally Beneficial, from which I took ſome Pains in making Extracts, and to introduce with thoſe, ſeveral neceſſary Alterations, to render the Plan generally better calculated to the Situation of this Province, and the Riſque by Fire, which Property and Houſes, for Want of Care in Chimnies, and from the Nature of the Buildings, are much more incident to here than at Home.

MR. PRINTER,

THE voice of blood penetrates the ſkies, and, wantonly ſhed, awakens the feelings of all human creatures. Murder is an attack upon our ſpecies, deſervedly reſented by all who partake of the ſame human nature, and we cannot but hold the fiend in abhorrence that ſports with our feelings, and ſacrifices life to a lawleſs paſſion. To reſtrain or curb irregular paſſions, and to provide for the ſafety of every individual, is the firſt deſign of ſociety and government; whoever is unfriendly to that deſign, oppoſes or counteracts its proceedings, is the enemy of ſociety, and cannot claim any protection from laws which he endeavours to invalidate; neither can that government expect ſubmiſſion from ſubjects whoſe proceedings are not grounded upon law; and its authority exerted rather againſt thoſe aggrieved than thoſe who have a juſt cauſe for grievance and complaints, violence under pretence of law, oppreſſion under the colour of juſtice, blood ſhed in ſupport of iniquity, of all provocations men may be expoſed to, are doubtleſs the hardeſt to be borne with, and if oppreſſion makes even a wiſe man mad, tyranny, denial or perverſion of juſtice, muſt ſhake every connection, and, in proportion of the calamity they are productive of, muſt alſo entail infamy and the execration of mankind on their guilty authors. I was led into theſe reflections on lately reading in a South-Carolina paper two different accounts of the unhappy diſturbances in North-Carolina, the one written by a Pennſylvanian, ſtating ſome conſiderable facts, and the other ſigned A Friend of that Province, indicating the meaſures of government againſt the unhappy people ſtiled Regulators, profeſſedly allowing that theſe people had laboured under great oppreſſion from officers, and that the government had been too long inattentive to theſe grievances, and had not till very lately repealed ſome unjuſt law (theſe are is own terms) under which theſe people had greatly ſuffered. The Pennſylvanian ſeems to leave the judgment of the whole with his readers, but ſtrongly concludes, "that the whole muſt now be left to the deciſion of a higher tribunal, to the ſelf-condemning conſciences of the guilty, and an avenging God."

The diſpute poſſibly may now be at an end, but a civil war in America is a phænomenon of too great importance to be ſoon forgotten; thoſe that hereafter may read the account of the diſmal tragedy will not read it without their feelings, and it ſeems highly neceſſary that poſterity ſhould be furniſhed with faithful accounts of the matter. It is not to be expected that the accounts given by the parties themſelves can be entirely void of bias, prejudice, fear, affection, or partiality, but it is to be wiſhed, for the honour of human nature, and of government in general, that the preſſure, neceſſity, moderation and juſtice of the unhappy victims may contribute to the public repoſe by appearing to have ſuffered no more than they deſerved, and ſtanding as beacons to deter others from taking ſteps which, however plauſible, end in infamy at laſt, and ſpread miſery and diſtreſs far more extenſive than the tranſitory oppreſſion and acts of injuſtice of ſome rapacious officers.

It ſeems juſt and reaſonable that, in diſputes between government and ſubjects, the preſumption, as long as the matter is dubious, be in favour of government, and that acts wherein the different branches of Legiſlature, and conſequently a majority of the Repreſentatives of the people, concur, be looked upon as grounded upon equity and reaſon; and when the governed are forward to appear in arms, in ſupport of the acts of their governors, it ſhould ſeem the proceedings of government were popular as well as juſt, and that complaints againſt them muſt be deſtitute of ſufficient foundation. If ſubjects labour under real grievances acts of violence are not the regular way of redreſs, and, though the failure of gentler means may be pleaded in excuſe, yet, whenever law ceaſes to be the ſtandard, anarchy and confuſion muſt follow. Authority and the law itſelf cannot be really ſupported but by legal meaſures. When complaints run high, and appearances of abuſes committed are ſtrong, it argues the goodneſs of government, if it proceeds with ſteady juſtice, equally ready to reſtrain the iniquity of ſome and the turbulence of others; this ſeems the way to preſerve the peace of the whole, to ſecure a good conſcience, and the approbation of God and men. I conceive theſe are the true principles by which all acts of government muſt ſtand or fall, and by which a ſafe judgment may be formed of the merit of the different parties in this very unhappy affair.

The meaſures againſt the Regulators may be harſh and yet ſtrictly legal; the loſs of ſo many lives perhaps deſerves no otherwiſe to be lamented than as they brought it upon themſelves by their own conduct; the conquering heroes may be the ſaviours of their country, and deſerve ten times more praiſe than ever they received; the Regulators poſſibly were no more than a lawleſs and expiring faction, whoſe cauſe no man can plead, or whoſe proceedings in no inſtance can be excuſed; yet, if all this were admitted, for the ſake of many now living, and thoſe that will come after us, I ſhould be glad if "the Friend of that Province" would condeſcend to publiſh a refutation or elucidation of the following facts, as they muſt be called till diſproved, which many that wiſh well to government wiſh otherwiſe, and in ſo doing he will approve himſelf a friend of his province indeed; and, that I may not give him too much trouble, I will mention but two or three about which I have ſome doubt myſelf, and which really ſeem of conſiderable importance. When I read the Governor's promiſe that every officer accuſed or informed againſt ſhould be proſecuted, I could not but be highly pleaſed; complaints ought to be heard, it is worſe than folly to call them frivolous and unjuſt, and, under that pretence, screen them from legal enquiry; when I found that one officer pleaded guilty in one action, and was found ſo in ſix others, I thought now ſurely, if the Regulators act from principle, they will be ſatisfied, and the country made eaſy, but alas! quanta de ſpe decidit! I imagined at ſuch a time the Court would more than at any other ſhew their abhorrence of extortion, but, Sir, the culprits, 'tis ſaid, were fined in the enormous ſum of ONE PENNY in every action; if ſo, it ſhould ſeem juſtice or law is not ſo dear in that country as it is complained to be in ſome others; the plaintiffs and the perſons found guilty had their mere pennyworth of it; however, as the Friend of North-Carolina takes no notice of this circumſtance, I wiſh, for the honour of his candour and impartiality, it may prove groundleſs, and if ſo, it can eaſily be diſproved, if otherwiſe, the ſetting one penny fine upon actions fraught with ſuch pernicious conſequences, and which for years had put whole counties in a flame, will appear a very low fine, and be but a very indifferent proof, "that the complainants were not precluded juſtice."

It is asserted as notorious indeed as the ground on which the army fired against the Regulators, that an act of Assembly made it high treason to resist the Governor's army: Now on this head I have heard some men argue thus, either such resistance would have been high treason if such a law never had been made, or it became high treason only in consequence of that law; if the former, what need of an act of Assembly for that purpose? if the latter, it may possibly be questioned whether American Assemblies have any right at all to establish new species of treason, or to decide any thing such which is not already so by the laws of Great-Britain. This difficulty I think very well deserves to be cleared up or refuted, as it seems highly interesting that the species of high treason be not multiplied ad infinitum, nor any Legislature assume unwarrantable powers to dispose of the lives of individuals.

By the account of the battle at Alamance, published on the side of the government, I think it appears, that, after the Regulators advanced in sight, they halted, and being so close as almost to mix, grounded their arms, (some say in consequence of the Governor's orders) and messages went backward and forward between the two armies; the Regulators are said to have cried out Battle, though they quietly suffered the officer to read the proclamation for dispersing; by the account of an officer of distinction in the Governor's camp they are said to have been impatient to engage: yet N. B. "Some of their leaders prevailed with them to listen." On the Governor's side the same officer declares, "it was difficult to keep the people from rushing upon the enemy;" "they expressed an unfeigned ardour to engage;" and "clamoured to advance on the enemy, and it was thought advisable to lead them on." It is agreed that the Governor's army fired first, whether before the time given them was elapsed is disputed, but that the Regulators had first taken up their arms which they had grounded I have not heard even asserted: The guards in England when called out generally first fire blind, but this, those that had the command of the artillery against men only 25 yards distant, and at best only provided with small arms, probably thought too great a risk; the artillery, as that officer expresses it, was served "in a manner that did service to the cause, and honour to those concerned in the direction;" and some think, as the Friend of North-Carolina observes, that Providence took part in it: But whether Providence interfered more for the safety of 2000 that escaped a fire of artillery not 30 yards distant, and possibly not yet expected, or for the overthrow of 40 or 50 wretches said to be killed by this dreadful fire, or in the killing and wounding of 30 out of this small corps of artillery, every man may judge as he may see cause. This circumstance of firing upon people supposing themselves in treaty, and whose arms were on the ground, is so extremely odious, that I cannot think any man of honour could be guilty of it, but the report has gained too much ground to be set aside by anonymous contradictions and nameless assertions to the contrary, and it would be treating the public with too great contempt not to disprove it in the strongest manner, if it is really capable of being disproved.

I have read that some Gentlemen, met at the King's Arms Tavern in Newbern, have ordered some insertions in a New-England paper to be burnt by the Sheriff and by the hands of the common Hangman; as they pitched upon public officers for this business, they certainly meant to give it the air of a govermental act; if so, they acted truly upon principles which they condemn in the Regulators, and that there Sheriff, and that there Hangman, may safely shake hands with any of the Regulators escaped at Alamance, any other difference between them notwithstanding.

I must not take up more of your room, but if any thing should appear in any Northern paper to refute or solve these objections, impartiality will doubtless engage you to insert it in yours.

LONDON, SEPTEMBER 25.

LETTERS from Paris, by Saturday's mail, mention an insurrection to have happened in the dutchy of Besancon.

Have spread an alarm upon the Guinea coast, by some acts of robbery upon merchant ships; one of them carries a Death's head painted on the flag, on the main-top-mast head.

The recesses of our ministerial boards during the summer season, is a circumstance very justly complained of by the public; the nation surely is to exist in warm weather, as well as in cold; but if no business is to be done for her, from the prorogation to the meeting of parliament, it would be but barely honest in our ministers to relinquish for that period a title to their respective salaries.

SEPTEMBER 24. Lieutenant-Colonel Blacket is appointed Lieutenant-Governor of Plymouth garrison.

Friday last a little after one o'clock, the Princess Dowager of Wales was seen in her coach with Lord Mansfield, driving before her, at a very great rate, towards Canewood; which has been the occasion of much political speculation.

SEPTEMBER 26. We hear from Plymouth, that a French frigate has been seen cruizing off the Ramhead for this week past, and that she stands in for land at dark, and disappears at day-break.

A person, just arrived from Madrid, has given us the following list of the Spanish Navy, viz. one of 86 guns, one 84, two 80, one 76, two 74, seven 70, twenty-nine 68, one 64, one 62, eight 60, four 58, one 50, three 30, seven 26, three 24, eight 22, five 20, five 18, four 16; bomb-ketches, four 16, one 14, three fire-ships, and a hulk at Cadiz; making in all one hundred and two.

Captain Proby is appointed commissioner of the dock-yard at Chatham, in the room of Jonas Hanway, Esq.

As a proof of the very extraordinary rise of rents in this metropolis, it is worth observing, that the house late the silver-smith's shop, the corner of Bride-lane, Fleet-street, with the two behind, which about thirty years ago were let together at only 26l. a year, was let yesterday by itself, upon a repairing lease, at 65l. neat rent, and 200l. for the term of 21 years.

SEPTEMBER 28. The strongest literary correspondence subsists, and has done for a long time, between the Queen and the royal, learned, and elegant writer of the history of the house of Brandenburgh, the King of Prussia; and his Prussian Majesty has been heard to say, that of all his correspondents the Queen of Great-Britain is by much the most instructive, spirited, and entertaining.

Yesterday a committee of merchants, deputed by the corporation of Dublin, waited on the right honourable the Lord-Mayor, and presented the following resolutions. "At the Guildhall on the 15th of July, 1772, being public quarter-day, of the Guild of Merchants, the following resolutions were agreed to: Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Guild, that the freedom of the press is one of the chief bulwarks of the constitutional liberties of these kingdoms. Resolved, That the sincere thanks of this Guild be presented to the right honourable Brass Crosby, Esq; Lord-Mayor of the city of London. John Wilkes and Richard Oliver, Esqrs. Aldermen of the same, for their upright and manly perseverance in the cause of constitutional liberty, particularly manifested by their spirited and successful endeavours in rescuing the Printers of London from the arbitrary and despotic hands of illicit power, and thereby securing the peace, honour, and dignity of that great city and these kingdoms." It seems disgraceful to many cities of England, that Dublin should outgo them in testifying their regard to public liberty.

Mr. John Wesley has published the following as a certain cure of a fit of the gout in a short time, viz. By applying fresh treacle (not Venice, but common treacle) warm to the part affected, and covering it with flannel or soft wool, renewing the application, if need be, once in twelve hours; but says the diseased must be expected to return, if exercise and temperance are not used, and violent pollies avoided.

PARIS, September 13. On the 4th of this month the parliament of Bourdeaux was suppressed, and a new one created in its stead. About the same time the old parliament of Thoulouse was dissolved, and fifty-five of its members sent into banishment. Their seats are replaced by new ones.

A certain young lady, sister to a celebrated advocate (we are not told who) and three other young ladies of like rank, were visited, on entering this city in a hackney-coach, and many pamphlets being found in it, conducted to the Bastile. A private gentleman also, of a good family, has been shut up in the same fortress, for having dispersed writings relative to the affairs of the parliament.

BERLIN, September 14. The King of Prussia remains in perfect health at Potzdam.

CADIZ, August 28. A letter received from Mogador, (in the kingdom of Morocco) dated the 9th of June, gives the following detail. A man, who pretended to be inspired, entered the city of Morocco, at the head of about 6000 fanatics, armed with clubs, who killed, and pillaged the houses of the Jews, and those of some of the richest Moors. The populace were beginning to join them, in the name of the Holy Prophet; but the principal inhabitants repairing to the palace of the Emperor, to demand his succour, that monarch, finding them so numerous, thought proper to temporize, being fearful if he attempted force against them at first, he should hazard a general revolt; and taking advantage of a short calm among them after their first outrages, the Emperor informed the people that the person at the head of the band could never be inspired from Heaven, as nothing had been done by him or his followers, but the greatest acts of cruelty and rapine. In the mean time he caused the revolters to be surrounded by his troops, many of the least criminal were suffered to escape, some others were seized, and the ring-leader was put to death.

To the PRINTER.

SIR,

HAPPINESS is universally allowed to be the object which all mankind, some way or other, are in pursuit of. At the same time, it is universally allowed, that few, very few, if any, ever attain it. If we take a view of mankind in general, we shall find this observation very just. For, if you ask a man who is immersed in secular affairs, who is engaged in an extensive trade, who rises early, and takes scarcely rest, thereby sacrificing the hours which nature intended for the refreshment of sleep, to the hurry and fatigue of business: If you should ask this man, I say, why he is pursuing business with such earnestness and solicitude? He will immediately tell you, that it is to acquire a fortune, with which, after having borne the burden and heat of the day, he may live happy the rest of his days, sit down and enjoy himself, and partake the pleasures which proceed from a retired life, domestic happiness, and social friendship. Thus he is building castles in the air, anticipating joys which he will never possess, and taking anxious thought not only for the morrow, but for a distant period of time, which most probably he will never see. For how many men of this stamp have we seen, who, just when they were about to retire from business, have retired into the other world? Whilst they were building a commodious house, and furnishing it with a thousand decorations, death, cruel insatiable death, was preparing them a bed in the silent, solitary grave, where the indigent man lays as softly, and sleeps as soundly, as the most oppulent possessor. And of those few who retire from business, are those happy expectations they had conceived fully answered? Are those pleasing ideas they had formed realized? No; the man who has been used to the hurry and bustle of business cannot bear the solicitude of retirement. Time, that heaviest of burdens, hangs upon his hands; he cannot find amusement for his leisure hours, and would willingly engage again in that business which he so lately quitted. As he is not contented, of course he cannot be happy. Let us next take a view of those who glory in their high birth and pleasures which [illegible] enjoy all the pleasures wealth, honours and honour can afford; whose life is one continued scene of gay diversions and fashionable amusements. Surely these must be happy who possess every thing their imaginations can fancy, or their hearts can wish?---No, they are not; the enjoyment of these things produce nothing but disappointment; and a life spent in pursuit of them will end in vanity and vexation of spirit. Besides, in their exalted station they are subject to envy and ambition, two passions as diametrically opposite to the nature of happiness, as light is to darkness, as virtue is to vice. The one creates an anxiety in their minds when they behold any person possess an accomplishment which they are not master of; the other (ambition) never permits them to attain the height of their wishes; and whilst there remains anxiety in the mind, there can be no happiness; where there remains an enjoyment unfulfilled, a craving unsatisfied, there can be no felicity. Thus, if we were to enquire into the lives of men of different characters and professions in the world, as philosophers, poets, statesmen and divines, we should find, that these likewise come short, far short of the mark. But if there is such a thing as happiness to be obtained on this side of the grave surely it belongs to that man who lives a life of contentment, eats the bread of industry, and sleeps the sleep of temperance; who maintains that best of blessings, a good conscience, and enjoys the gift of providence with a thankful heart; who, as a member of society, contributes every thing in his power for the good of the community to which he belongs; and, as a private man, fills every character of life with integrity and uprightness. This man is happy, this man is blessed in all his works. H.
